Housing Market Spur Increased Number Of Calls For Locksmith Services

Business revenue for locksmiths has been impacted as well as most sectors in the United States, however, due to an increased demand for dependable locks and home security systems by struggling customers who want to hold onto their homes, Thousand Oaks locksmiths as well as security providers across the country have had their hands full, especially with re-key requests because of what's been happening in the housing market.

Los Angeles locksmiths quote Bureau of Labor Statistics report that found there were 26,000 locksmiths nationwide in 2006, projecting locksmith jobs to increase 22 percent by 2016, one of the highest growth rates of any industry.

With so much selling and foreclosing of homes, realtors need new locks and keys so they can get into the property, and once the homes are sold, the new owner wants new locks for peace of mind and security. The increased demand from customers is providing work for many types of Los Angeles and Van Nuys locksmith security providers.

Along with further demand for Los Angeles residential locksmith work, huge increases in installations for small businesses, like jewelry stores and tobacco stores and other business in commercial complexes where there are vacancies have urged more growth in the home and office security industry.
