

Tue, 8 Mar 2011

6:56 AM

Christian online community - The Christian Community Takes to the Web

The internet is becoming a more common avenue to connect people across the globe who share the same faith. The power of collective prayer can be realized now more than ever with the use of online prayer groups.

It is possible to request prayers from people around the world during your times of need, as well as to answer other people's prayer requests and be a part of a global faith movement. After decades of churches falling behind the technological age, with most churches lacking even a basic website, there is now an influx of followers looking to the web for faith-based questions, like-minded communities, and information on local events. Promoting a Christian lifestyle has never been easier with the development of an online Christian community complete with free Christian music, videos, and chatting.

The internet is becoming increasingly dominant as the leading source of information for most of the planet. If you're looking to expand the fellowship of your local church, think like a business owner and take to the web. Utilize the Christian online community and broadcast your church's local events to reach a wider range of like-minded people by. The internet can help you find people right in your neighborhood who never knew you existed, or it can find fellow Christians who are traveling or new to the area and looking for a place to worship. Take advantage of the many free resources right at your fingertips and reach people who would love to join your church community, and participate in church events and fundraisers - if they only knew you existed.

Single

Christians can also take advantage of the online church community to meet, message, and chat with other local Christian singles.

While social networking sites have already proven popular and a great way to network and share info with people around the world, until recently there has been a lack of faith-driven social networking sites. In addition to all the traditional offerings of a social networking site, such as sharing pictures, writing on friend's walls, personalizing your home page, and seeking out your favorite artists, authors, and musicians, on Christian social networking sites you can also feel comfortable discussing a central aspect of your life: your faith. Sharing a common view is essential to building a strong foundation for a lasting relationship, so why not meet singles who share your religious outlook?

Security: Public

Location: Not Specified

Mood: Not Specified

Music: